Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

Claims 1, 3-14, 16-19, 21-22 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as failing to comply with the enablement requirement. The claim(s) contains subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention.

As per claims 1 and 3-13, the only structure recited is "a computer" that is specifically defined in the specification to be "any machine capable of performing the calculations, or computation" [page 8, lines 9-11]. Thus, the word "computer" does not indicate a specific structural limitation in the claims and is read as "means". Therefore, this results in undue breadth because all of the functions recited are performed by a single means.

As per claims 14 and 16-18, a single step of "analyzing" is recited, including modification by functional language. The claim limitation is written as a function to be "performed by a computer", which was shown above to not recite sufficient structure. The "analyzing" is not modified by sufficient acts for achieving the specified function. The limitations presented by the functional language are all performed by the single "analyzing" act. Reference to the specification [beginning, for example, at least at page 9, line 11] uncovers that no single analyzing step is performed, but a series of steps. Thus, the scope of the claim is not commensurate with the combination recited in the specification, resulting in undue breadth.

As per claims 19 and 21-22, the only structure recited is "a first code segment" that is defined in the specification by "those skilled in the art will understand that the system shown in FIG 2. may be implemented in hardware, software, or a combination of both" [page 8, lines 14-16]. Thus, the "first code segment" does not indicate a specific structural limitation in the claims and is read as "means". Therefore, this results in undue breadth because all of the functions recited are performed by a single means.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Vidkjaer discloses "Identification of Small-Signal Transistor Models." Gannett discloses "extending an FET Layout Verification System to Bipolar Technology."
